

1
2
3
4
5
6
7 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
8 WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
9 AT TACOMA

10 CHRISTIAN DOSCHER,

11 Plaintiff,

12 v.

13 SWIFT TRANSPORTATION CO., INC.,

14 Defendant.
15

Case No. C09-5582-RJB

ORDER ON PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO RECONSIDER

16 This matter comes before the Court on the plaintiff's Motion to Reconsider (Dkt. 18).
17 The court has considered the relevant documents and the remainder of the file herein. Oral 18 argument would not be of assistance to the court, and that request is denied.

19 I. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

20 The plaintiff initiated this case in Thurston County Superior Court on June 23, 2009.
21 Dkt. 1 at 9. The plaintiff has at all times appeared pro se. The plaintiff's complaint alleges three 22 causes of action: defamation of character; outrage; and negligence. Dkt. 1 at 20. The plaintiff
23 filed an amended complaint that provided additional factual allegations. Dkt. 1 at 18. The 24 defendant removed this action to federal court based upon diversity of citizenship in accordance 25 with 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a). Dkt. 1.

26 The defendant (Swift Transportation) filed a motion to dismiss partially based on failure
27 to state a claim upon which relief may be granted in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).
28

1 Dkt. 4. Of specific interest to this motion, Swift Transportation argued that Mr. Doscher had
2 only alleged a failure by Swift Transportation to pay a $229 traffic citation, and that he had
3 failed to allege any facts that would give rise to the claim of intentional infliction of emotional
4 distress. Id.

5 On November 13, 2009, the court issued an Order granting in part the defendant's motion
6 to dismiss. Dkt. 14. Specifically, the court's Order dismissed Mr. Doscher's claim under the 7 tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress, or "outrage." Dkt. 14. On December 1, 2009,
8 Mr. Doscher filed a Motion to Reconsider regarding the Order partly dismissing his claims. Dkt.
9 18.

10 II. DISCUSSION

11 "On motion and just terms, the court may relieve a party or its legal representatives from 12 a final judgment, order, or proceeding for... any other reason that justifies relief." Fed. R. Civ. P.
13 60(b)(6). Motions for reconsideration are disfavored. Local Rule CR 7(h)(1). "The court will 14 ordinarily deny such motion in the absence of a showing of manifest error in the prior ruling or a 15 showing of new facts or legal authority which could not have been brought to its attention earlier 16 with reasonable diligence." Id.

17 Mr. Doscher requests that the court reconsider that portion of the Order that dismissed his 18 claim under the tort of outrage. Dkt. 18. The relevant portion of the Court's order states as 19 follows:

20 Likewise, Mr. Doscher has not alleged sufficient facts to plausibly support a claim of 21 intentional infliction of emotional distress. Mr. Doscher has failed to meet the high
22 burden established under applicable Washington state law to plead this tort; Washington
23 courts have required that plaintiffs show behavior "so outrageous in character, and so 24 extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as 25 atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized society." Grimsby v. Samson, 85 Wash.
26 2d 52, 59 (1975). Even assuming that all of the plaintiff's allegations are true, there is 27 nothing in Swift Transportation's actions that could give rise to a claim of intentional 28 infliction of emotional distress, even if its conduct is considered rude, potentially dangerous, or even negligent. Allowing Mr. Doscher to attempt to amend his intentional infliction of emotional distress claim would be futile, and accordingly the claim should be dismissed.

Dkt. 17. Mr. Doscher specifically argues seven points of error that he finds in the court's Order that would otherwise allow his claim to proceed. Dkt. 18.

1 None of Mr. Doscher's points of error present a "showing of new facts or legal authority
2 which could not have been brought to its attention earlier with reasonable diligence" as is
3 required by Local Rule CR 7(h)(1). Accordingly, Mr. Doscher must show some manifest error
4 in the court's Order to prevail on this motion.

5 The tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress is often referred to as the tort of 6 outrage. The terms mean the same thing in the law; but the legal definition of "outrage" is not
7 parallel to the lay definition. The dictionary meaning of the word outrage is "an injury or insult
8 to a person or thing – an act that violates accepted standards of behavior or taste; a feeling of 9 anger and resentment aroused by something regarded as an injustice or insult." WEBSTER'S 3D
10 NEW INT'L DICT. The distinctions between the dictionary definition and the legal meaning are 11 very important, but are often confused by lawyers, as well as by lay litigants.

12 Mr. Doscher is correct in noting that the common law tort of outrage may be supported if 13 the requisite emotional distress is caused either intentionally or recklessly. Grimsby, 85 Wash.
14 2d at 59. However, Mr. Doscher attempts to replace the recognized elements of the tort of 15 outrage– extreme and outrageous conduct, intentional or reckless infliction of emotional distress, 16 and resultant severe emotional distress– with the test of whether reasonable people would 17 exclaim "Outrageous!" when the defendant's action is explained to them. Those three 18 recognized elements are well settled by Washington case law. See Kloepfel v. Bokor, 149 Wash.
19 2d 192, 195-96 (2003) (stating that Washington adopted the elements for outrage from the 20 Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 46 (1965) in Grimsby, 85 Wash. 2d 52 (1975)). While the 21 colloquial test espoused by Mr. Doscher, one that was referred to in Browning v. Slenderella Sys.
22 of Seattle, 54 Wash. 2d 440, 448 (1959), may still have some arguability, its validity has been
23 clearly voided by Kloepfel and Grimsby.

24 Therefore, even though a defendant's actions may cause a reasonable person to think 25 them outrageous, or even to exclaim "Outrageous!", the plaintiff must support his claim for the 26 tort of outrage with sufficient factual material to meet the legal test. As stated in the court's 27 Order, Washington courts require that the facts establish that the defendant's conduct far exceed 28 any socially acceptable behavior; insults, indignities, threats, annoyances, and petty oppressions

1 will not suffice. Grimsby, 85 Wash. 2d at 59. The court cannot agree with Mr. Doscher's
2 assertion that racial epithets in the workplace such as the ones used to support a claim of outrage
3 in Contreras v. Crown Zellerbach Corp., 88 Wash. 2d 735 (1977), are far less outrageous than 4 the alleged actions of this defendant. The business decision to refuse to pay a traffic citation,
5 while it possibly had disastrous effects on the plaintiff, does not rise to a level of unacceptable
6 behavior equal to racial discrimination.

7 Additionally, Mr. Doscher argues that the court erred in dismissing the outrage claim
8 because that is a determination to be made by a fact-finding jury. The question of whether a 9 defendant's conduct is sufficiently outrageous is reserved for a jury only if the trial court initially 10 determines that reasonable minds could differ regarding whether the nature of the conduct could 11 amount to the tort of outrage. Robel v. Roundup Corp., 148 Wash. 2d 35, 51 (2002). As stated
12 above and in the court's Order, reasonable minds would not differ in finding that the nature of 13 the defendant's conduct does not support a claim of legal outrage.

14 Lastly, Mr. Doscher argues that the court erroneously ruled on the merits of his case
15 rather than the sufficiency of the pleadings. On the contrary, the court is sympathetic to Mr.
16 Doscher's position, and the court's Order was not a rebuke against Mr. Doscher for bringing his 17 claims. Mr. Doscher may be justified in feeling wronged, even outraged, at the defendant's 18 actions, especially in light of the fact that this situation could likely have been avoided with 19 Swift Transportation's payment of the $229 traffic citation. Nonetheless, it is this court's duty
20 and authority to apply the law to the facts as presented, and the facts here do not support a claim 21 of the tort of outrage.

22 III. ORDER

23 For the foregoing reasons, it is hereby ORDERED that:

24 Plaintiff's Motion to Reconsider (Dkt. 18) is DENIED.

25 DATED this 3rd day of December, 2009.

26

27 Robert J. Bryan
28 United States District Judge